DAY 28 We spent today constructing a freezer of ice cones, setting up and testing our iridium system and training for handling a confrontation with a polar bear while waiting for the Greenland Air Twin Otter to ferry us up to Flade Isblink. While we were assembling the radar system, we heard a noise in the sky and looked up in time to catch a beautiful white bird flying just overhead, inspecting us and the camp closely. We're not sure what kind of bird it might be.

We finished setting up the accumulation radar and ran some tests in preparation for mapping. We also made friends with my camp Greenland oled dogs. My, but they have thick fur! This evening I'm thinking of bear protection. In principle, you intense light burning powder may scare it off.

Ice.
